

CEO & VENDOR TRUST · SCRIPT A

Do not renew after a council was told heat maps were unavailable

About 2.5 min at ~140 words/min · 348 words · Replace [Your Name]. Speak calmly. One speaker, one focus.

Tip: swap bracketed fields. Cite numbers carefully. End with the cancel / yearly-vote ask.

Mayor Crawford, members of City Council. My name is [Your Name], and I live in Crossville.

I want to talk about the company Crossville is paying, and what another city's police chief said Flock told that council.

In April 2026, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, asked Flock in open meeting whether the system creates a heat map of a vehicle's movement. Flock's chief information security officer said no, that is not available. The next morning, Police Chief Dean Smith said the system does create heat maps. Council rescinded the contract the same day, seven to zero. The ACLU later put Oshkosh in a July 2026 report on Flock misleading councils and the public. Flock called the dispute a "minor nuance."

That is not the only trust problem. In a Forbes interview, CEO Garrett Langley described DeFlock, volunteers who map publicly visible camera locations, as a "terroristic organization," closer to Antifa than to lawful advocacy. Mapping tax-funded cameras is not terrorism. It is transparency. Forbes later reported that he apologized. The quote still shows how this vendor views oversight.

In August 2025, CEO Garrett Langley stated in writing that some public remarks about federal access had been inaccurate and that Flock "communicated poorly," including limited pilots with federal agencies after earlier public denials. Customer emails cast public-records requests as a "weapon" and critics as people who want to "normalize lawlessness." Staunton, VA, cancelled after Police Chief Jim Williams called resident questions "democracy in action" and the city said the CEO's narrative did not reflect its values.

Crossville should not keep paying a vendor after another city's police chief said the in-meeting answer did not match the product, then treats public questions as a threat.

THE ASK (say this)

My ask is clear. Cancel Crossville's Flock contract and remove the cameras. Require a public hearing and a recorded City Council vote before any surveillance equipment is ever proposed again. If you will not cancel yet, take a recorded yes-or-no vote each year before any renewal, with no automatic renewal that skips a public vote, and publish monthly use reports the public can check. Thank you. I yield.