

ABUSE CASES IN TENNESSEE AND GEORGIA · SCRIPT B

Tennessee and Georgia show a pattern, not a fluke

About 1.9 min at ~140 words/min · 268 words · Replace [Your Name]. Speak calmly. One speaker, one focus.

Tip: swap bracketed fields. Cite numbers carefully. End with the cancel / yearly-vote ask.

Mayor Crawford, members of City Council. My name is [Your Name], and I live in Crossville.

Tennessee and Georgia show a pattern. This is not one isolated bad apple story.

Tennessee has documented felony personal use of Flock in Oak Ridge and a reported Flock-linked misread stop in Morristown. Georgia newsrooms in July 2026 covered a wave of Flock-related misconduct cases in which officers were fired or arrested after alleged personal lookups and stalking patterns. Verified misuse incidents keep growing because reporters keep finding the same tool used the same wrong way: type a plate, invent a reason, and track someone's life.

These systems make intimate stalking easier because travel history is searchable. Victims and journalists often expose the abuse, not vendor dashboards.

Crossville residents deserve better than "trust officers not to look." Written rules help, but they do not stop an officer who already has the search box. Georgia's July reporting wave matters because it shows a pattern of misconduct, not one bad apple. When multiple departments in the same region generate Flock abuse headlines in the same month, the product itself is part of the story: searching is easy and nothing slows it down.

THE ASK (say this)

My ask is clear. Cancel Crossville's Flock contract and remove the cameras. Require a public hearing and a recorded City Council vote before any surveillance equipment is ever proposed again. If you will not cancel yet, take a recorded yes-or-no vote each year before any renewal, with no automatic renewal that skips a public vote, and publish monthly use reports the public can check. Thank you. I yield.