

OPEN STREAMS, MISUSE, AND CEO (COMBINED CASE) · SCRIPT A

Open streams, misuse, and a CEO who attacks oversight

About 2.9 min at ~140 words/min · 399 words · Replace [Your Name]. Speak calmly. One speaker, one focus.

Tip: swap bracketed fields. Cite numbers carefully. End with the cancel / yearly-vote ask.

Mayor Crawford, members of City Council. My name is [Your Name], and I live in Crossville.

I support public safety. I do not support leasing citywide surveillance from a company that has failed on security, enabled abuse, and attacked citizens who ask questions.

In late 2025, technologist Benn Jordan found Flock Condor cameras live-streaming on the open internet with no username and no password. Anyone with a link could watch live video, download about thirty days of archive, and change settings. 404 Media verified roughly sixty exposed cameras. Reporter Jason Koebler recorded himself on a street in Bakersfield, California, and watched himself on the livestream. Local TV, including Denver's 9NEWS and West Palm Beach's WFLX, confirmed exposed police camera feeds. Flock called it a "limited misconfiguration." That is a product-security failure. Crossville should not keep buying "trust our cloud."

Misuse is a pattern, not a rare glitch. In Milwaukee, an officer searched a woman he dated and her ex nearly one hundred eighty times, then resigned and pleaded guilty. An Internal Affairs detective who worked that case was later charged for personal Flock use and for secretly installing a GPS tracker. In Oak Ridge, Tennessee, an officer used Flock for personal searches, got caught, and was convicted. Crossville already runs the same kind of system.

Look at the company's leadership. In Oshkosh, Wisconsin, Flock told a city council in open meeting that heat maps of a vehicle's movement were not available. The next morning the police chief said the system does create heat maps. Council killed the contract seven to zero and took the cameras down. CEO Garrett Langley called people who map publicly visible cameras a "terroristic organization." Forbes later reported he apologized. Staunton, Virginia, cancelled after the CEO's customer email cast public-records requests as a weapon. Police Chief Jim Williams called resident questions "democracy in action."

Crossville does not need to wait for our own open-feed scandal, stalking case, or Oshkosh moment. Cancel the contract and remove the cameras.

THE ASK (say this)

My ask is clear. Cancel Crossville's Flock contract and remove the cameras. Require a public hearing and a recorded City Council vote before any surveillance equipment is ever proposed again. If you will not cancel yet, take a recorded yes-or-no vote each year before any renewal, with no automatic renewal that skips a public vote, and publish monthly use reports the public can check. Thank you. I yield.

flock safety®

Cameras

2507089002D

2507089002D

Hls Stream

File Content

start (ms)

end (ms)

window (ms)

Load Stream

12/13/2025 17:28:58

Jason Koebler crossing a street median on open Condor livestream (Bakersfield, CA)

